train crashed its destructive wny. The hour was about 7 o'clock, and the darkness of night was gradually rendering the road obscure. The horses jogged along at a merry pace and the children began to think of home and supper. At a point, perhaps fifteen miles down the track from Richmond, the Bermuda Hundred Road, along which the party was traveling crosses the Atlantic Coast Line. While the wasons were slowly making their way to this crossing the cannon ball train from Norfolk, running at a speed of about forty miles an hour, was thundering from Petersburg toward Richmond.

Mrs. Lozon was killed outright. Her little boy, of almost five, met the same late. Bessie Lozon, a girl of thirteen, was terribly hurt and cannot recover. then pushed back to the fatal spot. The wreck of the party was gathered up and the two bodies were laid out in the haggage car. The injured girl was atretched beside them. The two boys also got in and the father followed. The train then started off again and before long was in Richmond. During the short time that it took the train to make the trip Mr. Lozon sat with bowed head beside his dead wife and child. Not a word he spoke, nor did he, move until he reached the station. His sudden and awful bereavement was paralyzing in its effect.

There is a conflict of testimony as to whether the engineman blew for the crossing. A passenger seen last night said that he was not at all sure about it.

Mr. Lozon said that when he heard the train coming he would have shouled to his will to stop, but he knew her to be careful driver, and thought she was a position to judge better than he uld. The accident occurred about 7 o'clock when it was rapidly growing dark.

THE SURRENDER GROUND

a place where General Lee turned over the flag of the Confederacy, the hopes of the South and the remnant of his heroic army to General Grant, april 3, 1885. I drove out from the depot four niles behind "Hall" Flood's pair of pretty sorrels and drew reins at a rail fence beside the red dirt road. We dismounted, climbed the fence, walked a few steps and stood under a poplar tree, which measured seven feet around, and there was a cast fron tablet about $x2 feet resting at an incline upon a short fron post, which had been erected by the United States government. In raised letters, all fron, that will surely see another century, was this it-cription:

"This tablet marks the apot upon which General Robert E. Lee, C. S. A., stood while reading his farewell order to the army of Northern Virginia, April 10, 1865."

That was the day after the surrouder.

That was the day after the surrender, when that vanquished army of heroes was breaking up. As I stood there and thought of the grand old man, as sitting, heart-broken, on his horse, he said good hys to the starved and ragged men who had followed him four years through unparalleled yietories, trials and disasters and tried to imagine their feelings as they crowded around him and stroked "Old Traveler's" mane. I felt that I was of my hat, bowed my head in memory of the men and his men, though it was 38 years ago.

I plucked a few daisies and a sprig of cedar that grew on the memorable spot and silently left it. Some yards off, in the woods, was another tablet marking the spot where General Lee tented on the 9th and 10th of April. A quarter of a mile south, near the roadside, in a little grassy field, was a tablet with this letering on it; "Near this spot, under an apple trees, General R. E. Lee, C. S. A.,

A short time before the Prosident, accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt, had gone from the house into the woods near by to chop wood, that being a favorite exercise of his. The man was turned back by the officer, who told him the President was not at home. Swenyon, who said he was a gardener, looked curiously about the grounds and then started on his return to the villege. He was followed by another officer in one of the President's road wagons. Swenyon asked a passing driver for a ride and rode into the village with him. He had scarcely arrived in Oyster Bay when he was taken from the wagon by two secret service officers and examined. Don't Let Them.

That there is a settled purpose, a fixed determination on the part of a certain element of the Demberatic party in element of the Demberatic party in the primary election plan into disrepute and to render it so distasticul to and unpopular with the masses that they will demand its abolition by the next State Convention of the Errty, no intelligent man who has watched the trend of recent overtia will venture to deny. No leader of any prominence has dared or will dare openly to attack the primary plan as long its it continues a party law. The attacks upon it have been covert and insidious, and proceed from those who have been the beneficiaries of the political conditions that have long existed in the State and who are content and anxious that they shall remain as they have been. They managed to get all they wanted by means of precinct meetings and county conventions, in the manipulation of which they have measurably succeeded in making the primary distasted to tamp oposibility be gainers. That they have measurably succeeded in making the primary distasted to the people thore is no doubt, through the powerful assisting the plan applicable to candidates for county or not-political offices without regard to the popular wish on the sublect, and by the action of the State Committees at its meeting recently held in Richmond to settle the muddle in the Shenandah senatorial district.

EAST RADFORD, MONTGOMERY
COUNTY, VA., Sept. 22.—The re-entrance of Judge Archer A. Philogar into public life is regarded by a number of persons with whom I have talked in four or five

I have several times recently heard his name spoken of in connection with the governorship, and more frequently his consent to enter the State Senate has been discussed and gratification thereat expressed.

While in Fincastle last week a number of clitzens of the town and of the county as well, in discussing Judge Phlegar's nomination, spoke of the pleasure the felt at his decision to re-enter public life. As I was on the train en route from Botstourt to Roanoke, a lady who takes a deep interest in public affairs spoke with enthusiasm of Judgo Phiegar's can didacy, and a gentleman in the smoking car unreservedly declared Archer Phiegar his candidate for the gubernatorial nomi-

When I reached Roanoke, on the day of the primary, a great many people spoke of Phiegar as the man for the governorship next time. Any doubt which may have existed as to his popularity in that city was removed by the cverwhelming victory he achieved over W. W. Berkeley, a Roanoke man, his opponent for the nomination.

Montgomery, Judge Phiegar's county, was mearly solid for him. Only three votes were cast for Berkeley at this place. Yet citizens of East Radford are greatly regretting that the vote was

TYLER AT POLLS.

TYLER AT POLLS.

Ex-Governor Tyler took the deepest interest in the campaign, and remained in the neighborhood of the polls until nearly time for them to close. His son, Mr. Hai. C. Tyler, used the family carriage throughout the afternoon to convey voters to the polls.

Among the voters here was a cripple, a man who was so badly hurt by a Norfolk and Western train some years ago that he has nover walked since. This man got into his wheel chair and wheeled himself to the voting place, a considerable distance. Tears were in his eyes as he expressed his pleasure at being allowed the privilege of voting for such a man as Judge Phiegar.

And then I heard the story—heard it from a dozen lips. After the man was injured he sued the railway company for damages. It was the opinion of nearly everybody that his case was a just one, but the jury did not think so, and he went out of court without a cent. But Judge Phiegar, though he had for many years been an attorney for a corporation, which is supposed not to have that which essentially differentiates man from beast, went to the officials of the road and induced them to give the injured man a house and a pension. The number of this county, but as the years have giving Day he receives a check of considerable amount, signed by a gentleman of this county, but as the years have gone by pretty much everybody has learned to know the name of the man who really gives the money.

"My Dear Mr. Cunningham,—On the seventy-third page of your valuable journal, the Confederate Veteran, of April, I find the following senience: In 1889 Mr. Dimitry came South to aid his friend, James Redpath, in the preparation of data for the memor of Jefferson Davis, which the two wrote in collaboration with Mrs. Jefferson Davis, which is quite inaccurate, and I ask the insertion of this correction in your next issue. "The lamented and gifted Mr. John Dimitry came to Beauvorf for a few hours, and I should have been glad to have had his assistance in looking up data; and his criticisms and memory of events would have been especially valuable to me, but he told me that his eves were so afflicted by some allment that the kind of work I especially wished him to do, viz: the summing up of the military services of our commanders, he could not perform; so that to my knowledge he did nothing in the preparation of my memoirs. I had not the appendix to the Congressional Globe, and asked Mr. Redpath to go into New Orleans and cony accurately the citations I had made from memory. Neither Professor Dimitry nor indeed did any one else other than myself, except such aid as my esteemed friend, Colonel William Miller Owen, gave, whom I invited to write lish history of hattles in which he had borne a distinguished and honorable part in the Washington Ardinery. Colonel Owen wrote many very spirited and clear accounts of the hard-fought battles of our troops; but unfortunately, my publisher declined to publish them when incorporated into my narrative, and accredited to the author in the text, as they said the book would be more bulky than he contemplated. So they were crowfold out in the three condensations I was obliged to give my manuscript before its publication, after which I gave the majority of them to him for his use, as they were valuable and most interesting.

Another reception awaited the Cardinal when he went ashore at Hoboken. The pler was crowded with eccleciastical friends from this city.

PLEABANT VOYAGE.

The Cardinal had a pleasant voyage, and he said the ocean trip had recuperated his strength. Of the new Pontif the Cardinal spoke in terms of the greatiest enthusiasm. He said that the choice of the conclave had been most happy from an American viewpoint, as Plus X. was deeply interested in the development of the country, and

The Norfolk County Democrat complains as follows: In Norfolk county Alvah Martin and the political machine he controlist composed of white Republicans and alleged Democrats—have maintained control by means of the negro vote. Government cannot rise above the level of the electorate by which, in a republic, it is maintained. Government in Norfolk county has been maintained by the negro vote. It is a matter of experience not of conjecture, that govornment in Norfolk county has not risen above the level of the negro electorate by which it has been maintained. In its extravagance, its corruption its disregard of, and contempt of the public interest, in its farcical enforcement of the law, the government of Norfolk county under the Fusion regime has been on the negro level. No more need be said of it.

And yet, as we have said, most of our contemporaries have expended more time in denouncing, the theory advocated by the Norfolk county but to the State of Virginia and to Southern civilization seems not to have be? approclated.
